

The Codex Alimentarius Commission Adopts Guidelines for the Labelling of Genetically Modified Foods

Date: July 21, 2011

Earlier this month, the Codex Alimentarius Commission adopted guidelines allowing the labelling of genetically modified food products at its annual Codex summit in Geneva, Switzerland. However, this recent development may not result in sweeping changes for Canadians. While it may indirectly affect Canadian food producers who export GM food products to other countries, the labelling of such food products in Canada is unlikely to occur in the foreseeable future.